

County Government Structure

When elections occur, citizens vote on who they want to represent them. Sometimes it's for representation within their city. Other times, it's for representation within our county or even state.

When it's for the county, citizens vote for a representative within their district. A district is simply an imaginary boundary dividing up the residents into equal groups. Some districts appear quite large, but there aren't many people living in those areas... it's mostly desert.

A representative from a district is called a Supervisor. We currently have five (5) districts and five (5) Supervisors.

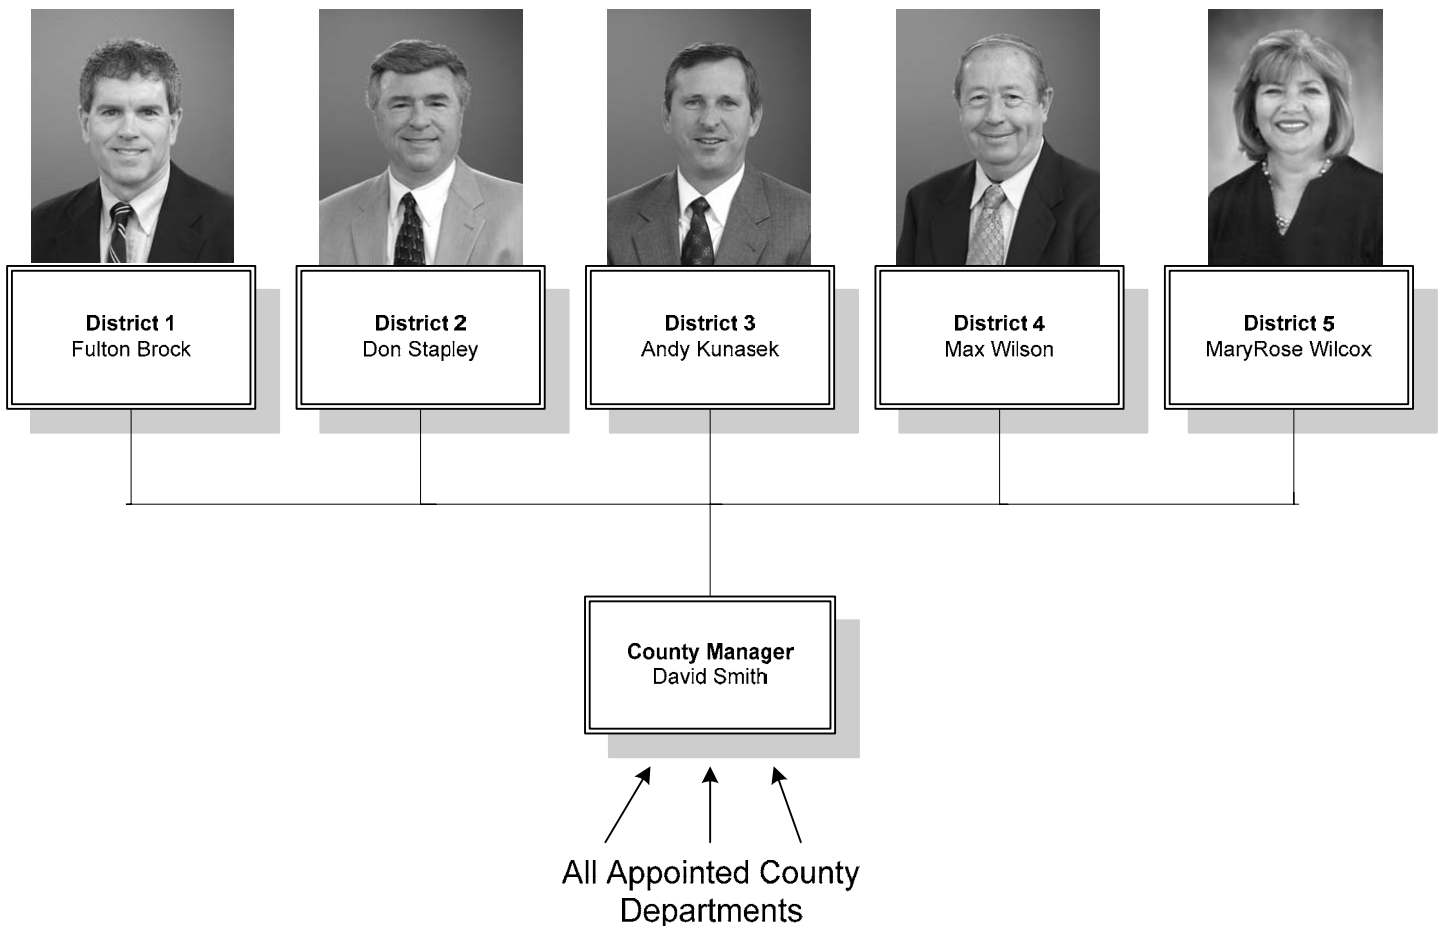

County Government Structure

Together, the five (5) district representatives, or Supervisors, forms what is called the Board of Supervisors.

The Board of Supervisors directs the work of the County Manager.
(This is where they represent your area of town to the County government.)

The County Manager essentially runs Maricopa County, based on Supervisor policies.

County Government Structure

There are more than 40 departments in Maricopa County.
Many of these departments, such as Elections, the public interacts with directly.
Some departments, such as Information Technology, perform an internal service to other departments.

Some of these departments are run by Directors who are appointed by the County Manager.
Others are run by officials who are elected by the citizens of Maricopa County.

Below are some of the County's departments and a little about what they do. For more information about a specific department, or to see a full listing of all departments, please visit the County's website at www.maricopa.gov
